between times was instantly suppressed by vigorous hissing. Modern music-drama was listened to in the modern spirit of continence and devotion.

The cast was an excellent one and Mr. Paur conducted with the zeal and the understanding of a high priest of the cuit, working up the climaxes with splendid success. Indisposition prevented Eames from singing Sieglinde, in which she was so successful last year, and the part was taken by Susan Strong. Here performance was much superior to her Eles in "Lohengrin," and while her voice scarcely gave adequate expression to the tender womaniliness of the character, she was a cred-
